LINEAGE OF THE HAWORTH FAMILY

It may be the love of noble deeds,
 Perchance 'tis pride, but he who reads
 Of these who did and dared and died --
 Then be it love or be it pride,
 There is a link that seems to hold
 Us bound to ancestors of old.

Family history is always interesting if accurate. The peculiar conditions under which America was settled by the English seriously interfered with preserving family records, but in recent years the study of the genealogy of American families has become popular.

As far as is now known the Haworth family of America sprang from one ancestor, GEORGE HAWORTH, called GEORGE THE EMIGRANT, who came to America from Lancashire, England, in 1699, with William Penn on his second voyage. George was a young unmarried man when he came to America. It seems he stopped with his sister, Mary, who had come over earlier, for a short while, then went to his first cousin, James Haworth, in Bucks County, Penn., where he bought four hundred and fifty acres of land on which he seems to have lived the remainder of his life. About eleven years after reaching America, he married a Quaker lady by the name of ~~Searbro~~ in the year 1710. He died in November of 1724, leaving a widow and six children - five sons and one daughter - namely, Stephanus, Absalom, James, John, George, and Mary.

Stephanus, the oldest son of George the Emigrant, had seven children. Their names were Macajah, Stephanus, George, Charity, Phebe, Wilmot, and Rachel. These settled in North Carolina.

Absalom, the second son of the Emigrant, had three children. Their names were Nathaniel, who married Hannah Barrett; Basalom, who married Mary West in Tennessee; and Mary, who married William White of Tennessee.

John, the third son of the Emigrant, died without issue.

JAMES, THE FOURTH SON OF THE EMIGRANT, married Sarah Wood. To this union were born six children; namely,

1. Jemimah who married John Wright.
2. Richard who married Anna Dillon.
3. George who married Susannah Dillon.

These were daughters of William Dillon from Ireland

4. James who married Mary Reece of Scotch descent.
5. Elizabeth who married Peter Dillon, a son of William Dillon.
6. Sarah who married James Wright, a brother of Jemimah's husband.

Jemimah Wright, the first child of James the fourth son of the Emigrant, had twelve children; namely, Jesse, James, Joseph, John who died in infancy, John again, Judah, Jonah, Jane, Joshua, Jemimah, Joab, Joel, --each child's name began with J and, it is said, they had a fine dog whose name was Jowler.

Richard, second child of James fourth son of the Emigrant, had eleven children, named as follows: Susannah, William, James and Mary, Sarah, John, Charity, Joel, John and David, twins.

GEORGE, THE THIRD CHILD OF JAMES THE FOURTH SON OF THE EMIGRANT, AND SUSANNAH DILLON HAWORTH had twelve children. Two died in infancy. The following lived: Mahlon (George D. Haworth's father), John, James, George, William, Mary who married Daniel Bailey, Sarah, Richard, Samuel, and Dillon.

James, son of James fourth son of the Emigrant, had nine children; William, James, George, Sarah, Jonathan, Charity, Eli, Margaret, and Levi.

Elizabeth (Haworth) Dillon, daughter of James fourth son of the Emigrant, had the following ten children: Sarah, Garrett, James, William, Lydia, Phebe, Susannah, Jemimah, Elizabeth, and Peter.

Sarah (Haworth) Wright, daughter of James son of the Emigrant, had the following ten children: John, Phebe, Sarah, Rachel, James, Elizabeth, Charity, Isaac, William, and Susannah.

MAHLON, THE SON OF GEORGE THE SON OF JAMES THE FOURTH SON OF GEORGE THE EMIGRANT, is the ancestor of most of the Haworth family of Clinton County, Ohio.

Mahlon Haworth was born in Frederick County, Virginia, 10th month 23rd, 1775. His mother was Susannah Dillon, a daughter of William Dillon. In the early married life of his parents, they moved to North Carolina and settled on the Yadkin River near the home of Daniel Boone. George Haworth, the father of Mahlon, and his brother James accompanied Daniel Boone on his second visit to Kentucky, their families being two of the six families that made up the party that made the first attempt to settle Kentucky. They were violently attacked by the Indians and were so discouraged that the Haworth brothers returned to North Carolina and remained there for twelve years. They then again went to Kentucky, but finding the Indians still hostile, they turned their course to Greene County, Tennessee, where George selected the place for his new home. He returned to North Carolina and, taking with him his two little sons, Mahlon and John aged twelve and ten years, he returned to Tennessee, built a cabin, and made other preparations to receive his family. When their work was done, the father returned to North Carolina for his wife and other children, leaving the two little boys alone in the new home with provisions enough, as he supposed, to last them during his absence which he supposed would be about three weeks. High waters, however, and other impediments to travel on pack horses detained them six weeks. During this time their provisions gave out and these boys were obliged to subsist on parched corn, roots, and berries, such as they could gather in the woods. They were afraid, too, of an attack from the Indians, and when at last their parents arrived, the boys ran to them with outstretched arms. The mother sprang from her horse and clasped them in her arms, and they all wept together for joy. In Greene County, Tennessee, Mahlon Haworth married Phebe Frazier. Their home was on the Little Holson River. Fish was an important article of their food, and they used a great many. In order to catch them, they built a small dam across the Holson, and below that they fixed slate so the fish could not get through. Each family had its morning to go and get fish, and if they caught more than they needed, they divided with others. They resided here near Greenville until the pioneer spirit again impelled them to seek a new home in the unopened forest. In 1800 Mahlon Haworth made a prospecting tour in Ohio and pushed his explorations as far as the Little Miami and Mad Rivers. Some authorities say his father accompanied him at this time. He would have moved probably to Ohio then had not his wife objected to doing so. His father removed to Ohio in the fall of 1803, and Mahlon and his family came the following year with the families of his uncles John and James Wright, reaching the place they selected for their home early in November. They crossed the Ohio River at Cincinnati, then a town of eighteen houses. It is said that Mahlon Haworth had a very fine horse called "Major", and that at Cincinnati he was offered, some say 150 acres, some say 90 acres of the land where the city now stands for this horse, but felt that he could not part with him. They moved in four horse wagons, called the "Old Virginia Wagon", and drove cattle and stock behind. Mahlon Haworth rode the "wheel horse", and drove over Clinch Mountain carrying his infant daughter Susannah in his arms. This Susannah became the mother of Mahlon and George Brackney and Mary Terrell. They had with them three older children, Rebecca, George Dillon, and Ezekiel. The wife's unwillingness to come to Ohio has before been mentioned. It is said that one night she dreamed that a swarm of bees came past the house, and that she took after them and followed them until they finally settled by a large spring, and there she left them. (This spring is thought to be the one situated near the house on the farm, now in 1933, owned by Dr. Frank A. Peelle on Todds Fork near Dover Church). When she awoke the next morning, she told her husband that she was ready to move to Ohio. Upon coming to this state, they drove right on through the woods, blazing the trees as they went, that they might be able to return, until they came to the spring of which the wife had dreamed, and there they settled. The land selected was on Todds Fork two miles north of where Wilmington now stands. George and Mahlon Haworth and John and James Wright were among the earliest settlers north of Wilmington. They came too late to build comfortable houses before winter set in, and Mahlon Haworth hastened to build a temporary cabin of round logs, the cracks filled in with moss, and they moved in without waiting for a floor, fireplace, or shutter for the door. They built a fire in the middle of the cabin and let the smoke pass out through openings in the roof. A bed quilt was hung up at the door, and forked sticks driven into the ground with poles laid across them, served to put their beds on. One night soon after their arrival, the horses were so restless, moving about and shaking their halter chains, that Mahlon got up to see what was the matter, and on looking out and seeing the prospect, he called to his wife, "Phebe, hard times are at the door". A deep snow had fallen and continued to fall until it was two feet deep. In the bottom land on the opposite side of Todds Fork was a camping ground of the Indians, and in the seasons when they occupied the ground, the lights of their camps were plainly seen from the cabin, and Indians were not infrequent visitors there. They gave the children many frights, but always seemed friendly. The well-known Indian, Logan, was often at their house. One evening Indian meal mush had been prepared for supper, and just as it was placed on the table, an Indian came in. He was asked to sit down and eat, and did so, putting a spoonful of hot mush into his mouth without cooling it. He arose very angry, thinking he was the victim of a practical joke, but when it was explained to him, and he was shown how to cool the mush in milk, he was appeased. Once when the father was away from home, an Indian lifted the quilt that hung at the door, and looked in, then leaving his gun outside, he walked in, took a seat on a stool, took out a butcher knife, and deliberately scraped the Spanish needles from his leggings. In broken English he asked for food, and on being supplied with a hearty meal, he quietly departed. The same day three bears came within a few feet of the house. At one time they had but one-half bushel of meal, and four horses, two cows and six people to feed. The nearest place to obtain provisions was Waynesville, fifteen miles away. The father went on horseback to bring what he could, but was necessarily gone two days. The mother and children were left at home, with the Indian camp in plain view on the other side of the creek. They cut spice brush to feed the cows and wild rye for the horses. Such were some of the early experiences of that little family in their snow-bound home. Soon after their arrival, they exchanged with Timothy Bennett a horse for 100 bushels of corn, a small quantity of hog meat, and a small hog. This with wild turkey, bear meat, and venison was all the meat they had until they could raise it. For some time they ground corn for bread with a hand mill. Aside from this, their bread stuffs were brought from the Little Miami near Waynesville, and were brought on the backs of horses. The next fall after they came to Ohio, a man came along with a bunch of sheep. Phebe Haworth was anxious that they should buy some, but her husband hesitated to do so on account of the wolves. Finally he bought two ewes for his wife and she kept them houses by the chimney all winter to keep them from the wolves. In the spring they had two lambs apiece, all owe lambs. The next spring they all six had two lambs each. In four hears they had forty head of sheep from those two ewes. These Phebe Haworth always called the swarm of bees she followed to the spring. In this rude cabin and during this cold winter weather, a daughter, Mary (or Polly as she was called), was born. She was a beautiful girl and was the admired of all the country round, but in her young womanhood, in the midst of her loveliness, she died. On this farm also were born to Mahlon and Phebe Haworth their children, Phebe, Mahlon, John, Elijah, James and Richard. Rebecca, the eldest child, died in early womanhood, John and James in infancy. The remaining eight children lived to be respected and influential citizens of Clinton County. At the close of the War of 1812, there came to Mahlon Haworth's house a company of "Light Horse", as they were called, which had been in the service during the war. The horses were nearly dead; were poor, with sore backs, and their legs were terribly swollen with the "scratches". He took them all in, fed and helped to doctor them for weeks until they were all well and able to travel. Only one of these horses died, and it was hauled out into the woods. The howling of the wolves around its carcass was terrible, and so terrified the children that they could not sleep. Many interesting stories are related of Mahlon Haworth's killing wild animals. He had a strong steady nerve, and was a good shot. He was an active useful man in every thing that related to the advancement of the people and the good of the country. High official positions in the state were urged upon him by influential friends but were declined because of the conscientious scruples of his wife, who was a Friend of the strictest type. He was a kind affectionate husband, father and grandfather, esteemed by all his neighbors; and he enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens, having filled for many years after the organization of the county a very responsible county office, the duties of which he discharged with the strictest fidelity and approbation of the people. He lived to enjoy the development of the country which he had done so much to advance. From his old Todds Fork home, he was called to his glorious heavenly home. At the end of his earthly life, he suffered great bodily affliction, but he enjoyed rare peace of mind and the deepest consolation. His spirit was wonderfully filled with the presence of Christ. He spoke to those with him of many remarkably favored seasons he had experienced in his life, but said he had never enjoyed anything that would compare with what he had experienced upon that sick bed. His life on earth came to its close on 3rd month, 23rd, 1850, and he went with rejoicing to be with Christ.

The father carried Susannah in his arms much of the time as he drove the four horse team, riding the wheel horse. LETTER FROM AN EARLY SETTLER
Clipped from "National Republic" for March, 1928

One of the followers of William Penn wrote this letter to his family in the old country. It was dated Philadelphia, August 26, 1699. He tells of the hardships on the ocean for fourteen weeks in an overcrowded ship.

"To my dear Mother, Brothers and Sisters:

"After my dear love to all, with my dear love to all my friends and neighbors, hoping that you are all in good health, as I am at present. Blessed by the Lord for the same. Though I have been very weakly at sea, in the latter end of our journey, but it pleased the Lord, that I got on shore at a place 100 leagues short of Philadelphia, where I was informed that my sister dwelt there, at a place called Hurbells, and so in much weakness I got to the place and quickly found her, and staid there one week, and then set sail in a sloop for Philadelphia, for which I paid 5s. My sister was in good health, and she hath four children, 2 boys and 2 girls, and her husband being well also, and is a hatter in his trade.

"We were fourteen weeks at sea. After we left Liverpool, a long and tedious journey we had, for we being over many in the ship, I believe hurt many, for we had many distempers, amongst us, as fevers, flux and jaundice, and many died at sea, about 56 and at shore there died about 20. Henry Mitchell died about midway, his son is dead also, and one Ellis Schofield, and Robert Brewer is dead, and hath left his goods to be returned to his kinsfolks at Liverpool. My brother-in-law is dead and child also died about three days before my sister. She was indifferently well most of the way, but about 100 leagues of sight of land, she bore a child, and it died and then she died, and left her household goods, to my sister, and one half of the clothes and the other half she left to me. Thomas Mulgrave is dead also at sea, and Henry Mitchell's wife died at shore.

"As for my sister here she doth somewhat incline to come to meeting, but she liveth so far remote from any meeting, that she seldom goeth - but as for her husband he doth not incline to go to Friends meetings.

"If my brother, or any of the neighbors, do incline to come into this country let them be careful that they do not come too many in the ship as we did, for throng, and the smell of many, then many fainted away, and died. We wanted water to drink, for having salt beef, we were much athirst, and could not get enough to drink, for the seamen stowed the hold so full of goods, that they had not room enough for water - then wanting such things as nourished us, we suffered hardships. But if any come, let them buy for themselves, over and besides the ships allowance, spices, brandy and cheese. Let the seamen pretend what they will, or else victual themselves, but a little beef, and some bacon and wheat flour is very good, and cheese and butter and eggs, and any other mild sort of food, and as for your goods you bring, let them bedticks very good, with all sorts of bedding, bring no hats, except very good and hardwares; so be careful of being thronged in the ship, or a summers journey, lest you be hurt as we were. We had a hard passage; we were brought to an allowance of water, and for every four we had 2 cases of water and then 1/2. So no more, but very dear love to my mother, brothers and sisters, with the rest."

THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
FROM 1789 TO 1861

The history of the United States from 1789 to 1861 is a story of growth and change. It begins with the signing of the Constitution in 1787, which established the framework for the new nation. The early years were marked by the struggle for independence from Britain, followed by a period of relative stability and growth. The 1820s and 1830s saw the expansion of the nation westward, as well as the rise of the industrial revolution. The 1840s and 1850s were a time of great controversy, as the nation grappled with the issue of slavery. The Civil War, which began in 1861, was the culmination of these tensions.
